ALFALFA EXTENSION.

The Interest of Eastern Farmers in Growing This Crop.

Great as is the number of experiments with alfalfa that have been made in our eastern states in past years, that number promises to be doubled in this present year. The interest is widespread, according to National Stockman and Farmer. Thousands will make failures either because they do not have the right conditions in the field or because they do not know all the needs of the new crop. The following facts are pretty well established: Land intended for alfalfa should have good drainage, either natural or artificial. The soil should be rich. There have been more cases of success upon clay loams than upon very loose soils.

Time in the Soil. Alfalfa wants lime in the soil. Limestone soils have given a smaller percentage of failures the country over than have other soils, but applications of lime to other kinds of soils may fit them for successful alfalfa growing. The bacteria that live on alfalfa roots are not present in the greater part of our eastern states. Where they have been introduced, through sweet clover or other means, no artificial inoculation is needed. Where they have not been brought in by natural means it is wise to use inoculated soil. Some bacteria doubtless are given to the land when the alfalfa seed is sown, but usually they are too few in number to save the full stand of plants.

Treatment of Seed Bed. Treatment of the seed bed is important. An inverted sod rarely makes a good seed bed for a new sod of any kind. A highly manured sod, cropped with corn or other tilled crop for a year and replowed the following spring, makes a good chance for alfalfa seeding. Any preparation that gives plenty of thoroughly rotted organic matter and a fine, firmly settled soil is all right. Weeds are the chief enemy of alfalfa in its first year. The best scheme to control their growth is the right one. Some prefer a thin seeded nurse crop and the sowing of the alfalfa in the spring. Some prefer spring breaking of the ground and then frequent stirring of the surface soil till all weed seed are germinated and then seeding alfalfa alone. Where summer grasses abound it is a good plan to break the land in midsummer, roll heavily, making ground fine and firm and then seeding alone. Have drainage, lime, fertility and inoculation and sow at such a time and in such a way as experience has taught is best to escape weed growth.

On the Moon. If a ham weighing thirty pounds were taken up to the moon and weighed there, the "pull"—the attractive force of the moon upon the ham—would amount to only five pounds.

Coins of Japan. In Japan an iron coinage begun about 1636 has existed up to the present day. A curious coin made of a mixture of silver and copper was long in use in Japan. It varied in size from a small pea to a large bean.
